IMPORTANT INFO Portable Surface Anchors are not intended for use as a weight bearing device. They may become dislodged from the intended positioning in a vehicle or aircraft. In some cases, enough force may be generated to cause separation from the ground. It is advised that Portable Surface Anchors are not placed in areas of known instability and are not used on sites where vehicles, aircraft, or mechanized equipment have encountered a difficulty. It is strongly advised that a competent person digs the hole prior to setting the Portable Surface Anchor. This Portable Surface Anchor shall not be set on an incline or decline without prior approval from a competent person. Avoid any places where the Portable Surface Anchor can settle, caves, or cavities.

Inclines and declines within ten feet (10') of power lines shall be avoided. In areas of uneven ground, the teeth should reach the intended position by two to three times the depth of the wall between two closely spaced pegs, with the teeth sunk by approximately 2 to 4 inches (5 to 10 cm). Do not set this Portable Surface Anchor in areas where surface water can collect. It may cause settlement and the guy line may become loose. Do not set this Portable Surface Anchor on top of any pipelines or utilities without prior approval. Settling can occur and the power generator may fail to function if the unit becomes dislodged. Where the Portable Surface Anchor is set on water, tidal waves, mud movements, or uneven swells, the unit may move and lose contact with the ground. If the Portable Surface Anchor moves from the set-point position, it should be corrected by putting the Portable Surface Anchor back into the set-point position. Portable Surface Anchors are not intended to be used as or to anchor a load. They have not been tested as to withstand a load. All portable Surface Anchors should be installed by a competent person. The use of a Portable Surface Anchor without the use of an approved adaptor is prohibited. The use of a Portable Surface Anchor without an adaptor is non-compliance with regulations.
